Screen Printing

This style of printing is highly versatile, offers the best degree of sharpness on any texture of ribbon, and is also washable.

This method is also the most economical in production and can be made in regular colors as well as in matte metallics.

Every ribbon has its own composition and will behave differently when printed. Some ribbon present unique technical challenges.

Please contact your local sales representative for more information.

Puff Printing

Long known as the most luxurious and exclusive of printing methods, puff print is often found on high- end and luxury goods. The raised texture of the print adds sophistication. Puff print can be done in matte or glossy finish in all colors including matte metallics.

Additionally, puff print can be married with a variety of metallic foils to bring another dimension of richness to your look.

3D Printing

A new method of printing which is turning people's eyes, 3-D print also has a raised effect but with much sharper and defined edges. The height of the print may also be customized. The print retains a higher color fidelity on some more difficult print requests.

Hot Stamping

Available in shiny and matte metallics or non-metallic colors from a large range, hot stamping is a very popular print method. Often printed in the USA and Canada and using locally-sourced foils, this print method achieves high quality at an economical price with a smaller minimum order quantity within the North American markets.

Debossing

The ribbon is stamped between the plate and the counter, pressing the image below the level of the ribbon.

This creates a depressed impression, with a subtle, yet elegant look.

Transfer Printing

This method provides a solution when complex multi-color images are required such as photographs or multi-color patterns. Ink is printed digitally on sheets and then transferred onto a blank ribbon canvas which takes on the image via heat transfer.
